Helicopters attacked Egyptian military targets on the northern and southern sectors of the Suez Canal and returned safely, a military spokesman said.

Among objectives hit were positions, fortifications and artillery emplacements, he said.

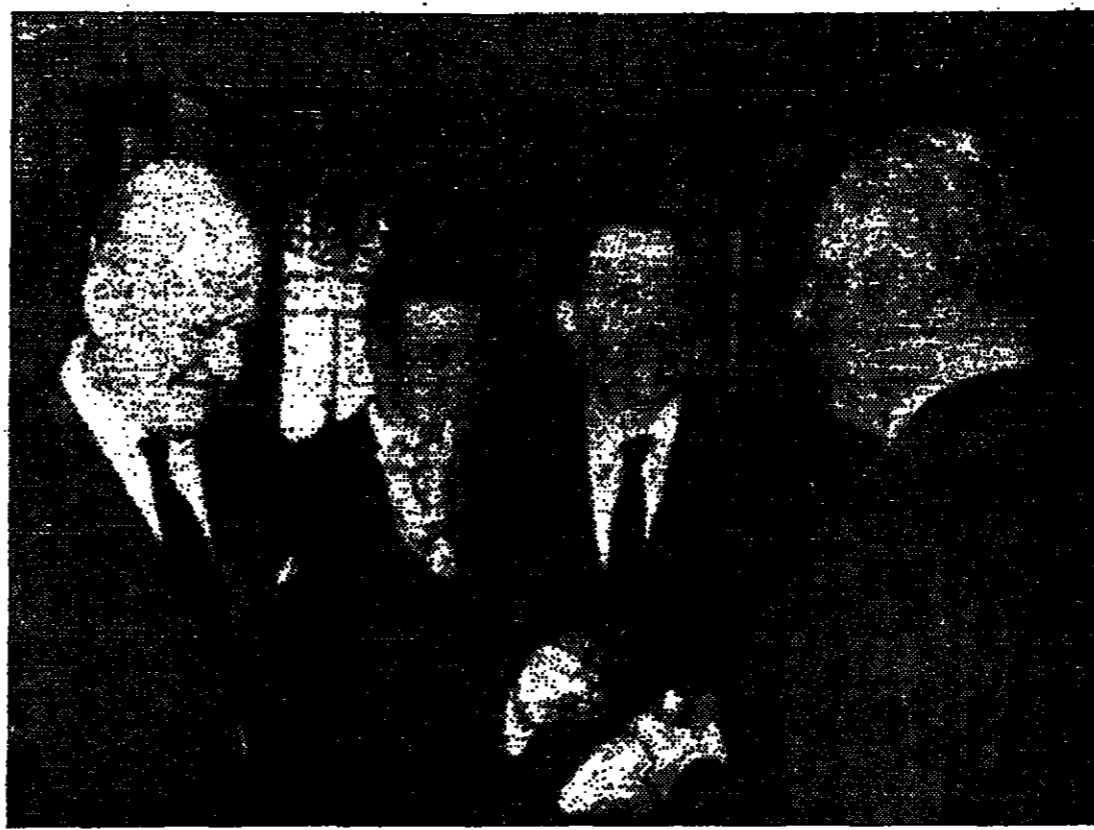

BEIRUT, July 28 (AP).—Iraq today called for the formation of a unified front of Arab regimes and other forces opposed to the American peace plan for the Middle East to work against its implementation.

The call by the Be'ath party leadership did not refer to either Egypt or Jordan by name. But it asked the governments which accepted the American proposals to bear in mind "what has become of Arab reactionary regimes in the past that have yielded to international pressure" against Arab interests and causes.

Forest Fires Blaze Up Again Near Marseille

MARSEILLE, France, July 28 (Reuters).—Two big forest fires raged up again on France's Mediterranean coast today, this port city, after firefighters appeared to have mastered them during the night. The fires have destroyed more than 7,500 acres of trees and brush in less than three days.

To the west, authorities said, a fire raging near the Spanish border has coming under control after ravaging some 1,750 acres since midnight. Forest and brush fires were still burning on Corsica, where 25,000 acres have been destroyed in the past two weeks.

OUT OF COMBAT—Plainclothes policemen drag a spectator past an overturned car near Chicago's Grant Park Monday during skirmishes between police and rock fans.

Youths Go on Looting Rampage

Three Shot in Chicago Rock Concert Riot

CHICAGO, July 28 (UPI)—A three-day rock concert "to bridge the generation gap" deteriorated into gunfire, fights with police and burning cars yesterday when the featured rock-music group didn't appear.

At least three persons were shot—it was not clear by whom—and 155 arrested and more than 150 injured, many of them policemen, as bands of youths roamed around the Loop, breaking windows and looting.

The rock concert, sponsored by the Chicago Park District, was to have begun in Grant Park at 4 p.m. yesterday—the beginning of the afternoon rush hour. While others were making their way home to family, dinner and television, young people, it was thought, would be growing to the amplified rock of Sly and the Family Stone. And about 50,000 to 75,000 turned out.

Early today, a spokesman for Sly and the Family Stone said the group had been told by city officials that it was to go on at 6:30 p.m. not 4 p.m.

Site of Earlier Clashes Grant Park had a vivid place in the memory of many concerned. Almost two years ago, in August, 1968, it was the scene of some of the clashes between police and anti-war demonstrators during the Democratic National Convention.

Four o'clock came and Sly and the Family Stone were still out of sight. Other rock groups played, marijuana was smoked, and some girls shed their blouses and bras. A man danced in his underwear.

The crowd, demanding Sly—one of the groups that played at the Woodstock festival—pressed forward toward the bandshell. Police set up a line in front of the bandshell then began to move the crowd back.

Stones and bottles began landing among policemen in front of the bandshell. "They're murdering us here with bricks and bottles," a policeman told central communications shortly after 5 p.m.

Many of the young people really cut loose. They charged, police and made them retreat, ripped up sidewalks for ammunition, overturned cars and set them afire.

Police, at first strongly on the defensive, responded with a volley of gunfire into the air by about 50 officers. That set the crowd back, and so did reinforcements and some tear gas. Some policemen clubbed those they had arrested after they stopped fighting.

Small Caliber Weapons Who shot those wounded was not immediately certain. Two teenagers were admitted to Mercy Hospital in serious condition with bullet wounds and Hemotrin. Hospital received one patient with a bullet wound. Police reportedly said at least two of those shot were wounded by weapons of a caliber smaller than police pistols.

Two blocks from the bandshell, two police cars burst—one overturned by a crowd of muscular, long-haired youths.

By 9 p.m. about 1,000 youths were running through the Loop, pursued by police in squad cars, who jumped out and made some arrests. Looting was reported in a

To Guide Nixon on Nominations Mitchell Bids ABA Screen High Court Choices

By Warren Weaver Jr.

WASHINGTON, July 28 (UPI)—Attorney General John N. Mitchell announced yesterday that he would consult leaders of the American Bar Association in the future before recommending nominees for the Supreme Court to President Nixon.

The decision represented a complete turnaround for the Nixon administration. The President's first four nominations for the court were announced without even notifying the bar association of their names.

The new policy goes considerably beyond that of the Eisenhower, Kennedy and Johnson administrations, which submitted the names of prospective justices to the ABA but only about a day before they were to be made public, permitting nothing more than perfunctory review and consultation.

Although Mr. Mitchell did not say so, the new plan for advance clearance was, in large measure, a product of unhappiness in the legal profession over the bar association's performance in the cases of Clement F. Haynsworth Jr. and G. Harrold Carswell, two Nixon nominees to the high court the Senate refused to confirm.

Some Contrary Opinion

Some lawyers believe, however, that the association could be more constructive in raising the quality of the court if its investigation were conducted later rather than earlier—after the Senate Judiciary Committee completes its hearings rather than before the presidential nomination.

In a letter to Bernard G. Segal, the ABA president, and Lawrence E. Walsh, chairman of its committee on the federal judiciary, Mr. Mitchell said he had concluded it would be "useful" for the committee to report to him on a possible recommendation to Mr. Nixon.

"I shall furnish to your committee names of persons whom I may have under serious consideration, with the understanding that the committee will make every effort to keep these names confidential and that the committee will proceed to conduct an examination into the professional qualifications of such persons and report back to me its findings," the attorney general wrote.

Mr. Walsh, in reply, hailed the move in a letter to Mr. Mitchell as "the most important innovation in the procedure for selecting Supreme Court nominees which any recent attorney general has undertaken."

NASA Director Paine Quits To Take General Electric Job

By Thomas O'Toole

WASHINGTON, July 28 (UPI)—Thomas O. Paine, the man who gave the green light to man's first landing on the moon, resigned today as director of the nation's civilian space agency to return to private industry.

In a move that was a complete surprise to almost everybody in the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, the 49-year-old Dr. Paine submitted his resignation to President Nixon at the White House in San Clemente, Calif., where the President accepted it with "deep regret."

"Now is the appropriate time for a change of command at NASA," Dr. Paine said to Mr. Nixon in a letter dated July 28, "and this coincides with my wish to return to private life."

Dr. Paine said he had accepted a "challenging opportunity" with General Electric Co., where he worked for 19 years before coming to the space agency in January of 1968.

While Dr. Paine declined to identify what kind of job he had taken at General Electric, he did say it "involved important national problems and technical opportunities outside aerospace and defense."

This seemed to suggest that Dr. Paine would either take over General Electric's research and development programs or its civilian nuclear power program, neither of which had produced a great deal for the company of late.

GE has already left the computer business, where it lost an estimated $500 million, and more than one source has put its losses in the nuclear power business at $300 million in the past five years.

There were reports that Dr. Paine had resigned his space-agency post because of repeated budget cuts in the space program, but he emphatically denied them.

"The cuts in the budget," Dr. Paine said, "had nothing to do with my resignation."

Dr. Paine said he discussed his resignation with President Nixon this morning for 20 minutes, during which time he said he made no recommendations about a successor.

Sources mentioned several possible candidates for the job, including Air Force Secretary Robert F. Imhoff.

'No, No, Please, No,' Screamed Tate Victims, Witness Recalls

LOS ANGELES, July 28 (UPI)—Tiny blonde Linda Kasabian, sobbing uncontrollably on the witness stand, described today the slayings at the home of actress Sharon Tate and said the scene was "just horrible."

Mrs. Kasabian, the key prosecution witness at the trial of Charles Manson and three female members of his "family," told of driving to the Tate home the night of Aug. 8, 1969, and climbing over the fence around the estate.

The party was led by Charles (Tex) Watson, who has resisted extradition from Texas, and included the 21-year-old Mrs. Kasabian, Susan Atkins and Patricia Krenwinkel, she said.

The girl said that Watson cut the telephone lines leading into the Tate home just before they entered.

"What happened then?" asked the Deputy District Attorney, Vincent Bugliosi.

"The lights of a car came toward us and Tex told us to sit down, the car rolled up in front of us and stopped."

"Tex leaned forward with a gun in his hand and the car stopped and he put the gun in the window and told me to the man's head. The man cried 'Please don't hurt me, please don't.' Then Tex shot him four times. I saw it clearly."

"The man just slumped over and Tex put his hand inside the car and turned the ignition."

The first victim was Steven Parent, 18, who had been visiting a caretaker at the Tate mansion.

"What happened next?" Mr. Bugliosi asked.

"We approached the house and Tex told me to go around in back and see if there were any open doors or windows. There weren't any and I came back and Tex was standing in a window cutting a screen."

Thurmond Seen Ending Nixon Feud

WASHINGTON, July 28 (AP)—Sen. Strom Thurmond, R., S.C., appears headed for a reconciliation with President Nixon following a feud over proposed administration segregation programs for the South.

Sen. Thurmond said the President appears to have "repudiated" the bad advice given to him by some aides and executive officers.

"Apparently, the President's good will and common sense won out," Sen. Thurmond said in a report yesterday to his constituents. But he said he will continue watching the White House to see if administrative attitudes really have changed.

Sen. Thurmond recently accused Mr. Nixon of breaking faith with the South because of an Internal Revenue Service ruling denying tax-exempt status to segregated private schools and because of a Justice Department decision to send federal lawyers into the region to oversee school desegregation.

The senator warned Mr. Nixon in a Senate speech ten days ago that the administration's desegregation policies could cost the President the White House in the 1972 election.

The IRS, Sen. Thurmond noted, has since granted tax exemptions to six Southern private schools and sent letters declaring that an open-admissions policy will be sufficient to secure tax exemption in the future.

Mr. Nixon has overruled the Justice Department on sending groups of lawyers into the South, he added, and has re-emphasized his support for Southern-backed textile-import quota legislation.

Israel's Acceptance Needed

The sharp reaction of Palestinian guerrillas and some Arab states to Egyptian-Jordanian acceptance of United States peace proposals only emphasizes the urgent need of a favorable reply from Israel.

Although it is reasonable for Jerusalem to seek assurances that the proposed 90-day ceasefire will not be exploited by the Egyptians and the Soviet Union to build up their forces on the west bank of the Suez Canal, it is important that the Israelis quickly signify their own support for Secretary of State Rogers' plan to revive peace talks without undue quibbling. Further delay will only play into the hands of Arab extremists who have become a mutual problem for would-be peace-makers in Jerusalem, Cairo and Amman.

The intransigent position adopted by the guerrillas' central committee and by the Syrians poses a serious threat to any ceasefire and to efforts to promote a compromise settlement. It is obviously the primary responsibility of President Nasser and King Hussein to deal with that threat from within their own Arab ranks. But it is also essential that Israel show understanding of the political problem faced by the more moderate Arab leaders and refrain from words or deeds that might strengthen their die-hard foes.

The guerrilla reaction, unfortunate and unwise but not unexpected, underscores once more the necessity for all parties to the coming negotiations to focus at an early stage on the problem of the Palestinians. The best way to defeat the spoiler tactics of extremist leaders is to offer the Palestinian people, from whom they recruit their fanatical strength, hope for a settlement that will give reasonable recognition to their long-frustrated aspirations. Toward this end efforts should be made to bring Palestinian representatives into any new discussions as soon as possible.

Syria's obstinacy is less explicable and even more difficult to overcome. If Damascus continues to defy every effort to promote peace, it will be up to the United Nations to condemn such outlaw behavior and to interject international peace-keeping forces between the Syrians and the Israelis on the Golan Heights.

Meanwhile, however, the positive responses of Egypt and Jordan to the Rogers proposals represent hopeful steps back from the brink of another Middle East war. Israel's acceptance is now necessary for resumption of talks that could bring the more enduring peace that all parties desperately need.

Salazar of Portugal

Dean Acheson regarded Antonio de Oliveira Salazar as "the nearest approach in our time to Plato's philosopher-king" but most democrats more perceptively likened him to a despot of the Middle Ages. "I coldly do my duty," said Dr. Salazar in an accurate description of his unflinching, low-key ruling style—and, by his own standards, he did.

He treated the Portuguese as children, despised liberalism and stamped hard on democratic tendencies. The most durable of Europe's 20th-century dictators, he was perhaps the least oppressive; yet he crushed the opposition parties and imprisoned or exiled his political foes.

This ascetic bachelor and economics professor unquestionably brought financial stability and a certain kind of political stability to a country that had been notoriously deficient in both. In foreign policy he was nimble enough to back Franco, Hitler and Mussolini in Spain's civil war, then reap the benefits of technical neutrality in World War II while actually helping the Allies by leasing them air and naval bases in the Azores. After the war, he anchored Portugal firmly to the Atlantic Alliance.

Portugal paid a stiff price for the Salazar brand of stability and is still paying heavily. Thirty-five years of the "unitary and corporative state" left a wretchedly poor country with a backward educational system and the highest illiteracy rate in Western Europe.

By setting himself firmly against political change in Africa, Dr. Salazar mired Portugal in costly colonial wars it can never win and soured relations with his NATO allies. Such was the unenviable legacy of problems at home and abroad with which his successor has had to cope.

Dr. Salazar once likened his role to that of "a brake against too much acceleration." What he really tried to brake Portugal against was the 20th century.

Helen Rogers Reid

The interplay of such intangibles as personality are so vital and so complex within a newspaper as to make the whole study of decision-making there largely an exercise in shamanism. Surely no one familiar with the workings of The New York Herald Tribune should attempt to set precise bounds to the influence of Helen Rogers Reid during the nearly 40 years of her association with that institution.

Those years saw the Tribune become the Herald Tribune; saw the merged paper grow steadily in prestige and authority, yet ended in a desperate, and ultimately vain struggle for survival in the city of its birth. They saw Helen Reid, on the advertising and business side, working with her husband, Ogden Reid, and then after his death in 1947 with her sons, Whitelaw and Ogden. Her titles varied; her intense presence and broad interests were constant.

Much could be said of Helen Reid's effect upon special aspects of the paper, and much about the sum of her impact upon the newspaper as a whole. And most of that might be disputed, in one way or another, by one of her former colleagues or another, as is inevitable in organizations of this kind. But it can be asserted with assurance that "H. R." was an essential ingredient in that particular combination of family spirit and professional emulation that made working on the Herald Tribune a very special experience. The Reids gave "paternalism" a dynamic quality, which the word does not usually connote, which survived their passing from the paper and which still is an inspiring element of the International Herald Tribune. It evoked a sense of participation all along the line that was, if not unique, certainly unusual in an increasingly bureaucratic world.

Helen Reid's trim, tiny figure was alive with communicable energy; her eyes struck cold fire or warm charm; her questing mind opened many windows on the world. She will be remembered by all who encountered her, and held by those who knew her in great pride and affection.

International Opinion

Missing the Boat

It is remarkable how cleverly, consistently and successfully the Kremlin leaders—who are faced with ample domestic difficulties of their own—are using the uncertainty of the West German and the United States governments to advance their own position in Europe and the Middle East. This is clearly illustrated by the renunciation-of-force agreement with Bonn and the half-hot half-cold war at the Suez Canal.

Within the Soviet leadership there is conflict between "hawks" and advocates of increased consumer production, between the military and union representatives, between managers and bureaucrats, neo-Stalinists and neo-Khrushchevites. But none of the Kremlin's opponents seems up to exploiting these internal tensions and polarities. No one, for example, is demanding an appropriate price of West German development aid to the crisis-weakened Soviet economy.

And up to now, no one has managed to show the Kremlin that a perilous peripheral adventure is less likely to open the Suez Canal to Soviet shipping than constructive power politics would be.

—From Neue Zürcher Zeitung (Zurich).

'The Autarch of Portugal'

Because he was deliberately reacting against something—against the mess Portugal had been in when he was young—Salazar missed the point. Work, property, the family—all the things on which he laid so much emphasis—are part of the good society, but they do not collectively equal political justice.

Africans still live under a regime which thinks it knows better than they do what is good for them. Perhaps now the symbol of the old order has finally disappeared it will be easier and more necessary—for the big jump to come.

WASHINGTON, D.C.—The United States is in for a decided innovation should the Harding and Coolidge ticket win in the November election. Senator Harding has announced that in such an event he will invite Vice-President Coolidge to participate ex-officio in all cabinet meetings and further take him into his confidence to the extent of making the Vice-President virtually an acting first lieutenant to the President. "The Vice-President is very important," he said.

Atoms and Pounds for Europe

By C. L. Sulzberger

NEW YORK.—This week, with the resumption of bilateral negotiations between Bonn and Moscow, Europe finds itself well launched on the diplomatic search for a new future. This future seems to be based on the assumption of declining American influence in its Western half and the somewhat less warranted hope of declining Soviet influence in its Eastern half. The ultimate definition of any new relationship must come in a "European security agreement" between NATO and the Warsaw Pact which would, on the one hand, formally involve the United States in its guarantee and, on the other hand, tacitly recognize the existing territorial and ideological status quo, a major Moscow policy goal. From a Western viewpoint, the basic factor in arranging a new regional power balance is bound up in the question of Britain's request for admission to the Common Market. This is an extremely complicated matter, touching upon economic, political and military nerves.

A U.S. Presence

The inner reason for French opposition to London's application, as expressed under Gen. de Gaulle, was a fear that Britain might enter "Europe" as an American Trojan horse and that the entire community like NATO would end up under Washington's direction. Even today, the American-controlled nuclear force inside NATO constitutes the third greatest atomic military power in the world—after the United States itself and Russia.

Moreover, the U.S.-in-Europe—meaning industrial enterprises controlled by American holding companies—is also one of the leading economic powers.

Britain's big business has similarly established a very impressive presence inside the Common Market and is almost certainly less concerned with the outcome of negotiations for London's admission than it was a decade ago; for British business is "in" already, even if political Britain isn't.

What Britain could now contribute to the market is brains, research, organization, and technical know-how—plus a consumer's market for West Europe's agricultural surplus. Furthermore, its banking talents and monetary expertise would help in the eventual task of devising a European currency system.

Right now, without seeming to understand the implications, the market depends heavily on American funds in the form of the Euro-dollar, a U.S. currency that never goes home because it is barred from the United States.

Heath's View

Prime Minister Heath seems at least tentatively to envision on a smaller scale the kind of nuclear economic contribution to the community by British membership that is de facto afforded today by American non-membership. If the Common Market were to accept British nuclear cooperation and institutionalize British economic and political cooperation it would clearly need to depend less on the informal arrangements which make the U.S.-in-Europe such a dominant atomic and industrial force.

Heath appears to regard Britain's small but important atomic capability as his negotiating trump. He recently wrote: "The harrowing experience of the United States in Vietnam has inevitably affected the American attitude toward the defense of Europe... the countries of Europe must learn to do more to protect themselves... I was led by this train of thought to propose that the British and French nuclear forces should be pooled to form a joint deterrent which would be held in trust for Europe..."

"The arrangement would not involve a breach of the nonproliferation treaty since it would not involve giving control over nuclear weapons to non-nuclear powers... This proposal could provide a means for healing the breach which at present exists between France and her NATO allies."

Such an approach was attempted in 1962 by Harold Macmillan but was rebuffed by De Gaulle after the Nassau talks when U.S.-British nuclear-missile ties were reaffirmed. Heath's job will be to discover a formula for presenting the idea again without either inciting Washington's wrath or, by passing NATO, further weakening the alliance.

That this is possible, however, is indicated by considerable backing for the idea in West Germany (among both government and opposition) and a gingerly revival of interest in France.

Bonn's position in bilateral talks with Moscow would be enhanced if it supported by a stronger Europe, better equipped to face the inevitable shrinkage of American military forces and diplomatic leadership. Thus, what the Common Market decides on its own growth must inevitably affect any new balance on the Continent such as that toward which current negotiations now grope.

Elite in Trouble Of Own Making

By Joseph Kraft

BERKELEY, Calif.—Social tension in the United States, being a subject usually studied by the educated, is generally blamed on the less educated. But every day announces that a main source of trouble is an overconfident attitude of snobbish contempt on the part of the American elite. And some underlying reasons for this attitude are now explained in the fascinating study of American universities conducted by Dr. Harold Hodgkinson for the Carnegie Commission on Higher Education here in Berkeley.

The starting point of the study is the diversity that used to characterize higher education in this country. Most colleges were started on the principle that led to the establishment of Yale as a barrier against the dangerous thoughts of certain Harvard divines.

Throughout the South, the Midwest and the West thousands of institutions were set up to build provincial elite, walled off with local spirit and old-time religion, against the sophisticated viruses distilled by the Eastern Babelians. College graduates, as a result, tended to differ widely from region to region. They had ties with local people and local institutions. They had roots.

Graduate Schools

But in the past two decades professional and graduate schools have become the dominant feature of higher education in America. Colleges exist not to turn out local gentry, but as way-stations on the route to higher learning. The standards of the biggest and best graduate schools—of California here at Berkeley, of Harvard, Columbia, Chicago, and Michigan—have come to dominate the whole system.

The domination of these few centers has as a first consequence the elimination of diversity among colleges. Dr. Hodgkinson found only slight regional differences in a wide variety of educational categories including student body composition, faculty attitudes, teaching effectiveness, and administrative methods. Even student protests, supposedly concentrated most heavily on the two coasts, turned out to run across the board.

"The data," Dr. Hodgkinson observed, "refute the commonly held assumption that there are major differences in educational institutions in different sections of the country... The monolithic status system exists in American higher education and pervades all colleges and universities."

This "monolithic status system" has a marked effect on the student body at most universities. The single hard way that is like to be a visible elite in what is basically an egalitarian country.

the racial and religious barriers that used to limit the higher educational opportunities for Jews, blacks, Mexicans, and other minority groups. The most widespread change, "was the increased heterogeneity of the ethnic composition of the student body."

Lower Rungs

But the sympathies generated by the great educational centers of racial minorities did not extend to those on the lower rungs of the economic ladder. The colleges opened their doors wider to middle-class members of ethnic minorities, by not to low-income groups—particularly low-income whites.

As Hodgkinson puts it: "Thus students appear to be more racial open than in the past, but they have become less open to social classes than they have to race. A black middle-class male may have a better chance of getting into a college or university than would a lower-class person of an race... Higher education is fundamentally a middle-class institution that has little dedication to those who are simply poor and not represent any particular minority group."

The social effects of all this are visible every day. Student groups newly infused with ethnic minorities, tend to be highly sensitive to discrimination and prejudice. This is one reason for the hostility to all kinds of superiority and authority—whether at the university in the society, or the government. At the same time, there is a great concern for the economic problem of getting along. That is one reason why there is so much contempt for those who have a grub for a living—mainly low-income whites in the blue-collar jobs.

Finally, the students have a burgeoning sense of exuberant strength. Not only do they think they are right morally, but they keep encountering their own hollowness all over the country. They have the illusion of great numbers and of power. And they tend to indulge their beliefs and inflict the feelings without the restraint that comes from the awareness of being weak.

In fact, however, the American elite is probably weaker now than at any time in the past. It is aligned with unloved minority groups. It has lost the camouflage that comes with being the champions of local interests. The college-educated in particular are out in the open as never before. They are marked men, set apart from others. And unless the students restrain themselves, unless they curb their exuberantly different style, they are going to cut the hard way that is like to be a visible elite in what is basically an egalitarian country.

Lindsay

I don't know why Mr. Gallup should be so surprised at John Lindsay's appeal to Democrats (Herald, July 22) given the questions asked: Surely any Democrat in his right mind would vote for practically anyone in preference to Nixon and Wallace?

However, choosing Lindsay to run in the first place is a very different thing. Lined up against Kennedy, or even Muskie, Lindsay would not get a look in. After all, why buy a rather second-rate substitute when you can have the real thing?

Swanage, Dorset.

Dissent and Change

Dissent and protest are genuine manifestations of mankind. In a democracy, where opinions and beliefs are so diversified because of the nature and origins of our people and their past cultural influences. The health and continuance of a democracy depend upon them. Dissent and protest give to citizens of a country the opportunity to express their beliefs and disagreements. This is why parliamentarism and representative government is the proper medium in which differences can be weighed and discussed.

Violence and destruction are no acceptable substitutes for dissent and protest. Violence and arson and destruction are the expression of anger and hate. The existing realistic issues which have been adopted are only political and social camouflage for the pathological minority of the student body of all the civilized world.

I have complete confidence that the unpublishable, healthy majority will contribute, and have already contributed, to the change to which they have properly guided their elders.

Stuyvesant Helped Build It

Port Where Dutch Held Off Indians Found

By Sandra Blakeslee

NEW YORK, July 28 (NYT)—The fragile remains of a colonial stockade have been unearthed in Kingston, N.Y., by a team of archaeologists who got to the site before modern enemy, the bulldozer.

The discovery, announced yesterday, has been acclaimed by experts as the oldest find in New York State under controlled scientific conditions. The Kingston discovery is significant, archaeologists said in interviews, because it is not most of the traces of Dutch settlement in New York State has been obliterated or made inaccessible by modern man, or by the paving of roads or the building of highways.

How They Lived
The stockade site found in Kingston, they said, will help archaeologists learn more about the Dutch life in the New York State during the 17th century. History books already tell a lot of the story. In 1658 the town of New Amsterdam, now Stuyvesant, arrived with 60 soldiers at a bluff on the East River where the Dutch had a stockade. The Dutch held off the Indians, the story goes, until the Dutch could be helped.

Round, shadowy patches on the ground show the location of post holes for a 17th-century Dutch stockade at Kingston, N.Y.

Many. The settlers demanded protection. Stuyvesant, however, said he could not spare the men for a garrison. Instead, he helped them build a stockade on the bluff in just 17 days and then left. The stockade lasted for about 50 years, through at least one massacre, until it was torn down for unknown reasons. The town of Kingston, however, which was an important trading post in the state, continued to grow around the borders of the old stockade.

Irregular Post Holes
Now that the exact location of the stockade has been unearthed, archaeologists say, it will be easier to reconstruct how the Dutch went about defending themselves.

Thus far, nine post holes have been discovered, showing that the posts were about eight to ten inches in diameter. The posts were not erected in a straight line, as is usually pictured, but were rather irregularly laid out, which "makes one wonder how they protected themselves," one archaeologist said.

The digging for the stockade, which began two weeks ago, was sponsored by the New York State Council on the Arts, which gave $5,000 to the Kingston Historical Landmarks Commission to do the work. The commission brought in Bert Salwen of New York University to conduct the dig.

The site of the old stockade is in the path of an urban renewal project. The commission now hopes that the New York State Historic Trust will match up the location and declare it a state landmark.

Helen Rogers Reid, 88, Dies; Headed N.Y. Herald Tribune

NEW YORK, July 28 (NYT)—Helen Rogers Reid, 88, former president of the New York Herald Tribune, died yesterday at her home after a long illness. Reid was the widow of Ogden Reid, president of the Herald Tribune until his death in 1947. Her 37 years on the New York Herald Tribune and its predecessor, New York Tribune, Helen Reid was an unflinching but careful force in the newspaper and in the city's civic and cultural life.

Her journalism was a by-product of her marriage to Ogden, whose father, Whitelaw, had founded the Tribune from Horace Greeley, its founder. Mrs. Reid established herself as a newspaper personality in her own

Helen Rogers Reid

There was little in Mrs. Reid's career to suggest the influence wielded, nor the force of her character. She stood only an inch and a half over five feet, and she looked as delicate as a piece of expensive china.

At the Herald Tribune Mrs. Reid had her voice for moderate Republicanism and for internationalism. In 1952 she supported Dwight D. Eisenhower for the presidency; she had backed Thomas E. Dewey in 1948.

Cinderella
To those who sought to assay her career, Mrs. Reid appeared as Cinderella who became queen. She was born in Appleton, Wis., the youngest of 11 children. Her father died when she was three.

In June, 1903, when Helen Rogers Reid was 14, her father died. Her mother, Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, one of the city's leading socialites, was seeking a social secretary. She applied, was accepted, and went to work in the Reids' mansion on Madison Avenue, across from St. Patrick's Cathedral.

Her father was in Mrs. Reid's life for eight years, dividing time between the United States and London, where Whitelaw Reid was ambassador to the Court of St. James's from 1906 to his death in 1912. During this time she met Reid's only son, Ogden, fresh of Yale. The couple were married in Wisconsin March 14, 1913.

Advertising Manager
Mrs. Reid's newspaper career began in 1918, when she became an advertising solicitor for the paper. It was in this position that she was reported to have poured millions into the paper. "Come down the office," Ogden Reid asked her, "and work the paper's ads out with me." Within two years she was its advertising manager, a post she held until 1947, when she became president of the Tribune.

Mrs. Reid's editorial presence was especially after the Tribune's prompting, acquired Frank Meyer's Herald in a $5 million deal in 1924. Mr. Meyer had come to the Tribune; he left selling paper and throwing the paper into the bargain. When Ogden Reid died in 1947, Mrs. Reid succeeded him as president of the New York Herald Tribune. She became chairman of the Board of Directors in 1953. Her son, Whitelaw, who had died in 1940 and had named her vice-president in 1947, succeeded to the presidency in 1965, at the age of 72. Mrs. Reid resigned as chairman but remained as a member of the board, and her other son, John, who had joined the staff

Power Reduced As N.Y. Endures Heat Wave, Smog

NEW YORK, July 28 (UPI)—The Consolidated Edison Co. reduced electrical voltage by 5 percent and appealed to major consumers to cut back today as a heat wave pushed demands for power to near capacity in the nation's largest city.

The utility acted at 1:15 p.m. when a 3 percent reduction in every borough except Queens at 9:40 a.m. failed to preserve Con Ed's reserves. It also had cut power by 3 percent yesterday but not until late afternoon.

Con Ed was crippled by the breakdown of its two biggest power generators. Prolonged hot and humid weather meant additional drains of power for air conditioning and fans. The temperature reached 91 degrees for the second day at 1 p.m.

Thick smog and high air pollution readings produced by a thermal inversion also continued today. Air pollution yesterday morning was above the "hazardous" level and just below "dangerous," according to the city's Department of Air Resources.

Michigan Acts Against Pollution

LANSING, Mich., July 28 (AP)—A bill was signed into law yesterday that gives Michigan citizens the right to sue industries, the state government or other residents for pollution.

Gov. William Milliken said in signing the bill that Michigan is the only state with such a law. It takes effect Oct. 1.

The new law allows citizens the right to go to court to stop industries from continuing to pollute water or the air, the freedom to challenge state anti-pollution regulations as too lax, or to take neighbors into court.

'Dead Sea' Creeping Toward N.Y. Beaches

WASHINGTON, July 28 (UPI)—Rep. Richard L. Ottinger, D-N.Y., told a House subcommittee today that recent scientific surveys indicate that the two-square-mile "dead sea" at the mouth of New York harbor has been spreading rapidly toward New York and New Jersey beaches.

He said data collected by the U.S. Marine Laboratory at Sandy Hook, N.J., shows the heavily polluted area of water is spreading north and southwest at the rate of about a mile a year. The northern edge of the polluted waters now extends to "within ten miles of New York City beaches," he said.

Rep. Ottinger charged that the Nixon administration was heading toward "an environmental Pearl Harbor." If it did not act to halt the dumping of dredge spoil and sewage sludge into the harbor.

Congo-Kinshasa Bars Tass Correspondent

KINSHASA, Congo, July 28 (Reuters)—Boris Toumanov, 32, correspondent of the Soviet news agency Tass, was given 48 hours today to leave Congo-Kinshasa.

Mr. Toumanov was served with the expulsion order by an official of the country's Security Department. He said later no reason had been given for his expulsion except that it was directed against him personally and not against Tass.

Some Strikers In Granada Go Back to Jobs

But Few Do Any Work; Many Still on Strike

GRANADA, Spain, July 28 (UPI)—Some of this city's 12,000 striking construction workers returned to their jobs today, but few did any work, labor sources said.

Most of the men who showed up for work spent their time standing about idly and discussing the concessions offered by the government-controlled unions with men still on strike, they said. Because of this idling, they said, it was impossible to estimate the difference between the men who supposedly had returned to work and those demonstrating at the sites.

The workers walked off their jobs for the second time yesterday after the government refused to grant their demands of a national union contract guaranteeing them a minimum daily salary of 224 pesetas ($3.22) and a 41-hour work week.

The strike followed a three-day walkout last week provoked by Spain's worst labor clash since the civil war 31 years ago. In it, three persons were killed and 88 injured, including 37 policemen.

Spanish police made 15 arrests when a group of leftist workers met at a monastery near Madrid to try to organize a general strike. Reuters reported, government sources as saying today. The group wanted a strike in sympathy with the three workers killed in Granada last week.

The walkout resumed shortly after the men returned to work yesterday. Their spokesman said they will remain on strike until their demands are met. Meanwhile about 100 construction workers in Seville demonstrated in support of the Granada strike yesterday afternoon. They were dispersed by police without incident.

UN Unit Calls for Creation Of a World Peace Corps

By Victor Lusinchi

GENEVA, July 28.—The United Nations took a decisive step today toward the creation of a world peace corps to assist in the economic development of the poorer nations.

The UN's Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution calling on the General Assembly to create an "international group of volunteers for development" on Jan. 2.

Spanish Cortes Passes Bill for School Reforms

MADRID, July 28 (AP)—The plenary session of the Spanish Cortes (parliament) today passed the new education law with only one negative vote.

The dissenting vote belonged to Fernando Suarez, a deputy representing family associations of the Spanish province of Leon.

Education Minister Jose Luis Villar Palasí, who presided over the session, said the law is "a necessary and urgent one."

The law establishes, among other things, free primary education for all Spaniards. It also regulates the financing of the education reform.

Educational experts have termed the bill the first modernizing of the system in more than 100 years. It calls for spending an estimated $40 million on capital improvements and another $40 million for curriculum and teaching.

Education Ministry sources have said that if funds are not available, the program will be put on a 20-year system instead of the proposed ten-year plan. This apparently would be to gain time for financing.

The bill covers Spanish education from grade school through university.

Moro Rejects Break in Ties With Libyans

Cites Aid to Italians By Embassy in Tripoli

ROME, July 28 (Reuters)—Italian Foreign Minister Aldo Moro said today that it would be absurd to break off diplomatic relations with Libya because of the confiscation of Italian property by the Revolutionary Council there.

Mr. Moro, who holds his post on a caretaker basis until a new Italian government is formed, was speaking to the Foreign Affairs Commission of the Chamber of Deputies.

He said: "The delicate and indispensable action which our embassy in Tripoli is performing for our fellow nationals makes one judge absurd formal measures such as a break in diplomatic relations."

But Mr. Moro again stressed Italy's view that the Libyan action was contrary to international law and treaties signed between the two countries.

Weakness Criticized
Meanwhile, small groups of demonstrators stood outside Parliament distributing leaflets critical of what they described as Italy's weakness in the face of the Libyan move.

Meanwhile, a Socialist was elected today as president of the regional council of Tuscany in a move that most likely will complicate current efforts to form a new national cabinet. Communist votes helped elect the new council president.

The militantly anti-Communist Italian Socialists have already rejected one attempt to reform the center-left coalition that included their own party, the Christian Democrats, Socialists and Republicans because, they said, the draft policy program was too soft on the Communist issue.

Fly through customs in New York.

There are 3,600,000 international passengers expected in New York City before the end of the season.

Almost all of these passengers must clear Customs and Immigration authorities at the International Arrivals Building at Kennedy Airport.

There are times when things can get a little hectic at the International Arrivals Building.

If you fly TWA, you can avoid all this. TWA has just completed a new terminal. (It is capable of handling the new 747's.)

It contains its own Customs and Immigration facilities. There are, in fact, 20 Customs Stations.

So you can whiz right through. Or take your time and relax.

Expressing the Subtleties of Strauss's 'Capriccio'

As the two accessibly vulgar Italian singers, Erika Köth and Anton de Ridder wailing all the humor from Strauss' Italian pastiche music.

The conversation in the orchestra is hardly less subtle and complex than that on the stage, and Ferdinand Leitner presided over it with an easy calm born of experience. The two high points of assembly—the so-called Laughing Octet and the Octet of the Servants—came off with amazing clarity.

Its Maximoviana's blue and gold salon, opening onto a huge garden, is a beautifully proportioned and uncluttered by rococo excesses.

criticism in laying to rest the notion that Strauss intended "Capriccio" to be performed without an intermission. An intermission was always intended for this work of almost three hours, he says, but the first performance was done in one breath so the audience could home before the nightly bombing raid. So much for other "tradition."

long black hair, her only prop is a tulle handkerchief hanging from her wrist. Though the songs by Abdel Wahab and Riadouni have a rhythmic compulsion that is frequently irresistible, an anguished voluptuousness that can start the most staid person undulating in— and sometimes out of— his seat, Oum Khoussoum hardly moves.

Her songs run almost an hour each and can run considerably longer. Her vocal style is not easy for the Western ear, it rides the musical line with anguish, a narrative drone that can descend to a dramatic guttural rasp, and at these moments the audience, which is never less than agitated, erupts in ecstasy.

Oum: Khoussoum, at 75, is a phenomenon that the Westerner without Arabic

The next event in the festival which continues through the American Paul Taylor De Company, was performed on the terrace at the entrance to the temple of Bacchus.

Taylor's work is well known to American and European dance audiences and he came to Baalbek fresh from performances in Paris and London.

The scale of his works is testified by such overpowering settings as "Baalbek" provides.

SCIENTOLOGY: THE NOW RELIGION

By George Malko. Delacorte Press. 205 pp. $5.95.

Reviewed by John Leonard

HALFWAY through this mind-boggling book, in the middle of a discussion of infinity tone scales, black thespians spitting white energy, the planets and gorilla goals, George Malko pauses to observe: "Of course all this struck me as being insane garbage." Of course. Up to this point, Malko had been so stoically groping his way through the mystical fog of L. Ron Hubbard's mind that one wanted to scream at him. "But it's preposterous."

Does it do any harm? May be unable to substantiate mors of kidnapping and other forms of hunger-mugging. I does paint a frightening picture of the "ethics Gestapo," paramilitary corps of communists who police the thoughts of the laity during the great amprnistics heresy. There we loyalty oaths, security checks even a criminals' prosecu bureau. Those deviating from the Hubbard line were to be investigated for any crimes their past; if crimes were found, they were reported to the police. Since each Scientology convert goes through "auditing" and E-meter exams, which open up a lot leads for such an investigation it was as though a Freud analyst turned over his private files to the police when a patient decided to switch to Ad or Jung.

Since screaming at books is about as useful as voting in presidential elections, the tension grew until Malko chose to relieve it. One can thereafter endure the E-meters of Scientology, Alice games, Havigness processes, gradient scale drills, capping beams and opposition terminals—not to mention the eight dynamics, the 24 logias and the 58 axioms—with that same incredulous gape one brings to the economic theories of Ezra Pound, or Wilhelm Reich's organic energy accumulator, or the protocols of Zion, or the flying nun.

However ugly these proceedings, and however suspect it is, the Scientology is a real and feared enemy, no one appears to be permanently hurt. At when a Scientist tells you that, while thinking about reasons why he had a tooth ache, he suddenly saw a gorilla—gorilla goals having been planted in his theta 83 trillion trillion years ago—the pain disappeared, what do you say? It is like a man who says he thinks he must have been a gorilla in a past life, a glue-sniffing, astral yarrow stalks and bubblegum.

U.S. Scientists Discover Giant Undersea Valley

PRINCETON, N. J., July 28 (Reuters).—New evidence supporting the theory that the earth's surface is made of constantly shifting blocks or plates has been uncovered by a team of American oceanographers from Princeton University.

The team, in cooperation with the U.S. Navy, made the detailed measurements in the Pacific Ocean of a sea floor feature known as a "triple junction," where three crystal plates adjoin one another.

The group discovered an underwater valley larger than the Grand Canyon some 600 miles west of the Galapagos Islands in the Pacific. The bottom of the 80-mile-long valley—the result of a triple junction—beneath three miles of water and walls a mile and a half high rise above the valley floor.

Wins His 15th Game

Seaver's Hot Hand Cools Off Giants

NEW YORK, July 28 (AP)—Tom Seaver, making his 42nd appearance of the year, picked up his 15th win by tossing three scoreless innings.

Seaver, belted for three early runs in muggy Shea Stadium, held the Giants to one hit over the final seven innings and gained his 15th victory.

The Giants scored twice in the first, one on Bobby Bonds' home run, and another in the second before Joe Foy cut the lead for the Mets with a two-run homer in the bottom of the second. A solo blast by Cleon Jones in the fourth tied it at 3-3. The Mets scored the go-ahead run in the fifth on Ken Singleton's single off 14-game winner Gaylord Perry.

"I pitched well with what I had," said the Met ace, who finished with a six-hitter and struck out six, fanning Willie Mays for the third time to snuff out a seventh-inning threat. "It was a tough night, muggy and hot, and I really had to struggle."

Cardinals 16, Reds 9

Jim Merritt, the only other 15-game winner in the majors, surrendered six runs and eight hits in the 3 1/3 innings he lasted at Riverfront Stadium as St. Louis broke an eight-game losing streak by beating Cincinnati, 16-9.

Richie Allen blasted his 28th and 29th homers, driving in three runs; Mike Shannon delivered four more with a bases-loaded double and a single. And Vic Davalloo fashed three doubles, good for two RBIs, as the Cardinals erupted for 19 hits—their high for the season.

St. Louis strugled off a five-run Cincinnati burst—capped by Johnny Bench's 34th homer—in the second on the way to only its third victory in 20 games.

Phillies 16, Dodgers 3

Tony Taylor, Deron Johnson and Larry Hise clubbed homers and Byron Browne knocked in three runs with a double and single, leading Philadelphia past Los Angeles, 16-3, for its 10th victory in 12 starts.

Twins 5, Orioles 2

Minnesota earned a split of its four-game series with Baltimore, winning 5-2. Roberto Ben Hylever picked up his fifth victory with help from bullpen ace Ron Perrano, Jim Holt and George Mit-

Yankees 5, Athletics 2

Mel Stottlemyre hurled a five-hitter for New York, who ended a four-game losing string by scoring three 10th-inning runs on Thurman Munson's single, four consecutive walks and a ground out for a 5-2 victory against Oakland.

Tuesday's Game

Astros 10, Cubs 4

CHICAGO, July 28 (AP)—Jimmy Wynn's three-run homer and a two-run homer by Johnny Edwards powered Houston to a 10-4 victory over Chicago for its 11th victory in the last 14 games.

Wynn slugged his 17th homer in the first inning after Jesus Alou singled and Joe Mauer walked. Edwards cracked his fifth of the season in the sixth, after Cesar Cedeno singled, to stake the Astros to a 6-0 lead.
